CHAPTER XXIV.
Why Colonel House and Woodrow Wilson separated.

There was never a break between Colonel House and President Wilson. Strictly speaking, it was a cohesiveness and a separation—in contrast with the warm friendship and intimacy of nearly eight years. After leaving the White House Woodrow Wilson never saw Colonel House again.

Like all great men, Mr. Wilson had certain weaknesses, and one was a peculiar susceptibility to what traditionally is known as "jealousy" and what in the parlance of an American democracy is sometimes defined as "hatred." Jealousies were conveyed to him by those who tried to sway his judgment and Mr. Wilson unconsciously absorbed those jealousies and dropped many of his friends without even giving them an opportunity to present their side of a controversy.

The experiences of President Wilson with Colonel House is probably unprecedented in all history. It has about it an air of mystery as well as tragedy. No man ever served another with the same zeal and with the same indifference to reward as did Col. H. H. House. His disloyalty from the president's confidence occurred in Paris. It was as much a shock to Colonel House himself as it was to all who followed him.

Colonel House occupied a position so extraordinary, yet so influential with the president that he was the object of much envy. He had gone to Europe in advance of the president and had been dealing with allied statesmen so long that

A Rent in the Gazette Is Better Than One in the Pocket

The thought of a rent in the pocket is greeted with short pants of dismay, whereas long draws of satisfaction come from a rent in the Gazette classified columns.

Mr. Starr, 606 Milton avenue, is one of the recent ones to receive a heaping measure of satisfaction from the Gazette advertising. Last week he advertised a six-room house and quickly found a desirable tenant.

"I rented the house ten minutes after the paper was released. Had it been in my hands, I wouldn't have been able to cancel my ad," said Mr. Starr.

When you discover a rent in your pocket, let one of the Gazette advertisements do the work for you.

Just call 2500 and ask for an ad-taker.

BOUNDARY BATTLE IN SUPREME COURT ARGUED TODAY

MICHIGAN WANTS ADDITIONAL TERRITORY IN NORTHERN SECTION.

ASKS 200,000 ACRES

Wisconsin Contests Effort to Grab Territory After 75 Years Lapse.

(By Associated Press)

Washington, D. C.—Arguments on the motion of the state of Wisconsin to dismiss the suit brought by the state of Michigan to recover more than 200,000 acres of lands in the boundary district between the two states were presented to the United States supreme court today.

The boundary suit involves determination on the boundary line during organization of the states. Michigan's principal contention in the suit follows:

That the first boundary contained in the enabling act of Michigan and Wisconsin territorial act is not fixed and certain and unalterable.

That the present boundary is not the first given, and the territory embraced in the present boundary does not contain all the territory intended to be given Michigan by her enabling act.

That the public officials of Michigan were unaware of the actual facts until after 1835.

Certain claims also are made regarding the location of the boundary on the Montreal river and that island lake is the proper point for the land boundary to begin.

La Follette Bloc Plans to Bolt Ranks of Party

Washington—When the republican national convention meets in Cleveland in June, the La Follette delegation will have 28 delegates and there will be one vote for President Coghlin, cast by Thomas Scott of Reno.

The first news of the results here was a disappointment to the delegation in congress, since Congressman Cooper was slated to read the platform of the La Follette delegates, and the platform on which they ran in Wisconsin.

The program is to read the platform and, when it is rejected by the convention, as it will be, since the convention will have its own platform made by the resolutions committee, the Wisconsin 28 and such other delegates as may be willing to join the procession, is to walk out of the convention.

That will be the formal launching of the third party. As it is now, there will be few, if any, to join the La Follette delegates in the walk-out. A few, perhaps, from South Dakota will join in the procession, so far the other western states have selected delegates for Coghlin.

What effect this will have on the future actions of Congressman Cooper remains to be seen. Whether he will run as a candidate on the republican or third party ticket in the district will be a question arising after his having left the republican national convention.

Washington—The question of contributions to national campaign funds by all interests received the momentary attention of the all committee again today. William H. Marsh, former treasurer of the democratic national committee, the first witness, was questioned about contributions by H. L. Doherty to the democratic war club.

Further reduction of all armaments; means of emphasizing the importance and influence of international law and plans for establishing and strengthening the world court along the lines of The Hague peace tribunal.

In a brief explanation, Senator Pepper said the economic features had been deliberately left out because of the time of the war.

2 Americans Are Slain in Albania

(By Associated Press)

Tirana, Albania—The killing of two Americans, George B. De Long of New York, and a country of this mountainous and sparsely settled European state. Travelers along many of the country roads are an easy prey for these bandits and in the region where the Americans were traveling an ambush by highway men is easily laid. Two men from the American legation here, Mr. and Mrs. De Long, have gone to the scene to make an investigation accompanied by a heavy guard.

A dispatch to the State department, which first reported the crime, had said that the Americans were named Coleman and De Long but gives no particulars. WISCONSIN FIRST

IN FARM PRODUCE

State Is Leader in Many Agricultural Departments Reports E. B. Swingle.

If the spirit of life is found in variety, Wisconsin ought to be in the tropics. The variety of firsts in production would tax a school teacher's memory.

This is the statement made by Everett B. Swingle, Racine county, of the Wisconsin College of Agriculture in a summary on Wisconsin's leadership in the current issue of the official student publication. One of her chief prizes, he declares, is an ocean on her own coast of milk. 10,000,000,000 pounds of milk a year. This also gives her the subsequent titles of firsts in the production of cream, the production of cheese with 25 per cent of fat, the cheese industry in the United States, and in the field of condenser products with one-fourth of the output of the United States.

Ocean of Milk. This literal ocean of milk has many contributors. 2,765,000 cows, the largest number in any state in the Union. This number includes the largest number of Brown Swiss cows and the largest number of purebred Guernsey cattle, with the greatest number in the average of cows to each farm. The fundamental of Wisconsin's supremacy and steadyness as to prosperity lie in these facts.

"Silos, those towers of prosperity, add another first," says Swingle. "There are 740,000 of them in Wisconsin. Wisconsin also is a dairy state in the production of 1,000 pounds of butter and the first dairymen's association. It now has the greatest number of breeders' associations and is first in the number of Federal and state-tested T. B.-free cattle."

Forces Ahead in Education. Wisconsin was early a leader in the educational forces of the state in agriculture. It held the first of the farmer's institute, which now number more than 200 in the state each year. The oldest agricultural society is proud of a Wisconsin home. It was also in the Badger state that Mrs. Carl Schurz held the first kindergarten in America. There are many of them now. Wisconsin still is her share of schools and teachers. Another first in schools was the first dairy school ever held in America. Wisconsin is also a leader in the production of the first state potato exposition, the first public soils laboratory tests, and the first field inspection of certified potatoes. The state also has the largest number of cow testing associations.

List Is Varied. The world's largest grain elevator must be a big one—yet Wisconsin has it. Several thousand bearing trees in Door county constitute the largest cherry orchard in the world. Another world's largest is the 18-ton acre potato field in Oneida county. One would imagine immense machines to make the fashionable square peas for all the 1,208,000,000 pounds of peas raised each year. Wisconsin, with this amount, has an equal to that of all the other states combined.

There is lots of rope to tie up any amount of statements of firsts, as Wisconsin also leads in the production of hemp in the United States. A dry joke like that, according to Swingle, needs to be taken with a grain of salt. More purchased seed grain is grown in Wisconsin than in any other state. Health for the nation is being sought for in this state especially in tuberculosis work. The largest contagious area of tuberculosis-free bovines is to be found in Wisconsin, 15 counties being the records.

PRESIDENT BRINGS

PRESSURE TO BEAR

Influence Felt on Tax Bill as Chief Gets Closer to Congress.

By DAVID LAWRENCE
Copyright 1924, by Janesville Daily Gazette.

Washington—Congress and the president have been getting closer together in the past week. Breakfast, luncheon and dinner sees some republican leaders at the White House discussing the legislative program. Mr. Coolidge is beginning to exercise his influence on Capitol Hill. First and foremost has been the president's intervention in the tax situation. The senate finance committee is virtually rewriting the tax bill passed by the house.

There have been so many changes that the senate leaders have found it desirable to consult the president constantly. His decision against the levy of new forms of taxation is significant. The house repealed several taxes which Secretary Mellon did not recommend for modification. As a consequence the house bill will not, in the opinion of treasury experts, get the needed revenue. This means that the whole scheme has been reconstructed. The tax on radio sets was suggested as a profitable source of revenue. Mr. Coolidge interfered. And now the senate finance committee will revise the tax on telegrams and telephone messages which were cut out of the house bill but which are in the present law. Indeed, many of the so-called nuisance taxes will be reconsidered as the outcome of the Mellon plan in the house turned the whole scheme upside down and the senate is compelled to rehabilitate the measure.

Must Watch Democrats. Mr. Coolidge finds that in summoning the leaders for conference he cannot depend upon their getting to the White House during the day because so many of them have important committee meetings. While the republicans are not interested in investigating themselves, they must be present to watch the democrats do not turn the sessions into campaign carnivals asking questions that make damaging headlines and furnish presidential ammunition for the coming presidential and congressional contests.

The president has found that about the only time of day he can get a number of men from congress into conference is early in the morning. The breakfasts have not been numerous but they probably will be one of the features of the Coolidge administration henceforth.

The spirit of congress at this moment so far as the legislative program is concerned is much better than it was a week ago. The agitation of a week against the alleged waste of time in investigations has aroused the democrats, who point that the responsibility for the delay is on the republican party. Nevertheless, the democrats are so adjusting their campaign as to keep the investigations going but at the same time insisting upon legislative action.

PLAN SHORTHORN SALE. Rock county Shorthorn breeders will hold a fall sale with the tentative date set for October 16, as the result of action taken during a meeting in the court house here Saturday.

Several changes will be made in the Shorthorn classes at the Janesville fair, application being made for the Wisconsin special classes which will give an additional $300 premium money for both the beef and milking classes and the regular fair premium.

It is likely that the separate class for Pole Shorthorns will be abolished.

BECKENFELDER TO EXHIBIT. Members of the Rock county Beckenfelders association are planning an exhibit for the 1924 state fair. The exhibit will be on display after-noon in the court house here were in favor of the exhibit and also for pooled local advertising to further the interest for the greater quality honey produced within the county and sold in standard containers. Action on both the state fair exhibit and advertising was put over to the next regular meeting to obtain sentiment of additional members.

FORMS SPRAY RING. A spray ring was organized at Como, near Elkhorn, by L. J. Morrison, Walworth county. The officers elected were as follows: Earl Palmer, president; Ben Breckenridge, vice-president; Chester McCall, secretary and treasurer. County Agent Merriam conducted an alfalfa demonstration at a farm meeting held in Little Prairie.

Guard Against "Flu"

With Musterole

Influenza, Grippe and Pneumonia usually start with a cold. The moment you get those warning aches, get busy with good old Musterole, that relieves congestion (which is what a cold really is) and stimulates circulation.

It has all the good qualities of the old-fashioned mustard plaster without the blister.

Just rub it on with your fingertips. First you will feel a warm tingle as the healing ointment penetrates the pores, then a soothing, cooling sensation and quick relief.

Have Musterole handy for emergency use. It may prevent serious illness.

Others: Musterole is also made in tulle for babies and small children. Ask for Children's Musterole. 25c and 50c, jars and tubs.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

Editor Gazette:

In the Voice of the People of April 1, 1924, appeared an article by one of our leading dentists against the use of iodine for the prevention of simple or endemic goiter. It was published on a page where all sorts of jokes are permissible, but after careful reading we think it was not intended as such.

The article consisted mostly of a quotation from a certain Dr. Hay. I do not know what constructive work this man has done along this line, as I have never seen his name connected with the extensive work which has been accomplished in this field of preventive medicine. Dr. Marine and his associates have worked on this problem for more than 10 years and have definitely proven that the administration of iodine prevents goiter. It makes no difference what theories are advanced as to the cause of goiter—the fact remains that iodine will prevent goiter. These conclusions are drawn by Drs. Marine and Kimball in a very scientific manner, and their work along this line is considered by medical men to be an epoch-making achievement.

All public health workers are emphatically endorsing the use of iodine as a preventive for simple goiter; but the doses are in milligrams rather than in grains. If in milligrams of the organic iodine prepared in choice, it is very important as to limit the use of iodine as a preventive for goiter. We wish to correct this impression, as thousands of cases of children in this country and in Scotland have been noted and no harmful effects have been observed.

One would be led to believe from the article under consideration that "iodism" due to an idiosyncrasy (individual peculiarity) to iodine, was of such importance as to limit the use of iodine as a preventive for goiter. We wish to correct this impression, as thousands of cases of children in this country and in Scotland have been noted and no harmful effects have been observed.

Now as to cabbage as a substitute for iodine in goiter prevention. I will admit that fresh cabbage contains a large amount of vitamin (A, B and C), and also a very minute quantity of iodine. It is reasonable to suppose that the vegetables of a district are dependent for their ingredients on the water and soil in which they grow. Now, water from many parts of the United States has been analyzed, and we find that the iodine content of the water differs. In the northern states, where goiter is rare, there is 15 times as much iodine in this water as there is in the southern states where we find what is known as the goiter belt. When we take this fact into consideration and also that the people in this locality eat a great deal of cabbage and still we have no large as 60 per cent of the girls with goiter, is it not true that we followed some other plan to eliminate this condition? We know that it can be done by the administration of minute quantities of iodine and so we advocate this remedy for goiter. These facts can be

SEVERAL FARMERS MAKE MONEY OUT OF SOGGY ROADS—Farmers near mudholes are doing a good business hauling out venture autos in the past few weeks. Councilman Andrew J. Gibbons, on his way to Chicago last week, took the road from Rockford to Elgin and suddenly backed up behind a long string of machines waiting to be hauled through a deep hole. The farmer used four horses and charged $2 each for a machine. It was afterward learned that the highway department was supposed to be doing the work without making a charge. When the team got within three machines of Mr. Gibbons' car, it was time for dinner and the farmer, with his four horses, not those of the Apocalypse however, went to the house announcing he would be back in about an hour and a half.

Bringing a few more back and making a detour Councilman Gibbons was hauled through the mud on another machine along with half dozen other machines. The road by way of Elgin is impassable for autos. The road west to Rockford is good and from Rockford to Rockford is passable with a strong engine pull all the time.

A similar condition has been reported on the road to Madison, north of Evansville, where one farmer has capitalized on an impassable stretch near his place.

Bright Sunday Cause of Heavy Automobile Travel

Hundred of Janesville motorists responded Sunday to the call of spring, stepped on the accelerator and meandered into the country. It was the first Sunday of the year that the delightful combination of a fair sunny day and open roads has prevailed.

Although the gravel and dirt roads are not in the best condition, the 57 miles of concrete highway in Rock county offered an outlet for the desire to drive.

There was comparatively heavy traffic on the Rock road and many were parked by the wayside while men, women and children searched for early spring flowers and gathered pussy-willows.

through the town, the rear guard was attacked by a mob of citizens of Elgin. Including many boys, who had stolen the fire hose reel, attached a hose plug and turned the stream of water on the marching hordes. One of the hangers-on stepped out of the mob, tore through the crowd, and wrested the nozzle away. It is declared he gave the order "fire," upon which a volley of shots rang out.

Who shot first? There were screams of pain and terror. The klansmen's rear guard kept marching back to the railroad where the special train was placed on a siding. Half of the entire party were in the coaches when the shooting occurred. The fire was returned from the lily crowd.

Railroad officials hurried through an order for the departure of the train, some of the wounded were put aboard the Altona special. Word of the riot was sent to Johnston and upon arrival here a squad of city police and county officers awaited the arrival of the special. The doors of the coaches were locked and none allowed to detrain. Twenty men were taken by the sheriff, Logan K. Keller, and his assistants.

In the train were three wounded klansmen who were hurried to a hospital here. Others were not seriously injured. These would not reveal their names.

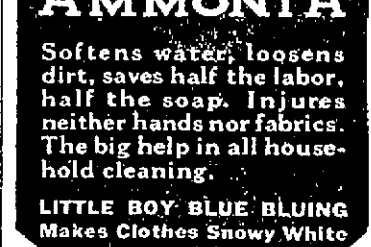

District Attorney D. P. Weber of Cambria county said on Sunday he had notified the Pennsylvania state police ten days ago of the imminent outbreak at Elgin. It had been promised men would be sent there. None were sent as far as he knows.

Some weeks ago the Loyal Lutheran church paragon was shot into. The wife of Pastor Elmer F. Brown had a narrow escape. On March 21, three revolver shots were fired into the building. Two men were arrested the next day and held under $2,500 bail as the men who fired the shots. Since that time the town has been seething with anti-Ku Klux Klan sentiment.

Keep Prettier Teeth
When your dentist brings them to you

After a dental cleaning, you marvel at the pearly whiteness of your teeth. Yet the dentist just removes the dingy film and tartar.

Learn what it means to daily combat that film. To keep teeth whiter, cleaner, safer all the time. This free test shows the method which millions now employ.

Film is the great trouble that viscous film you feel. Much clings and stays, despite the old-way brushing.

Food stains, etc., discolor the film, then it forms dingy coats. Film also holds dirt substance which ferments and forms acid. It holds the acid in contact with the teeth to cause decay. Germs breed by millions in it. They, with tartar, are the chief cause of pyorrhea.

Brush teeth daily in the old ways, yet these film-caused troubles, as you know, come to nearly all.

Protect the Enamel
Pepsodent disinfects the film, then removes it with an agent far softer than enamel. Never use a film combatant which contains harsh grit.

It will combat trouble of various kinds. It helps to keep the teeth free from food particles that ferment and cause decay.

It has an antiseptic effect. It relieves acid mouth and thus not only prevents harm to the teeth, but serves to sweeten the stomach.

It stimulates digestion and helps to prevent the forming of gas that causes dyspepsia.

Read from a widely known medical work:

"Chewing gum aids tooth nutrition and the cleansing action is a definite benefit—it prevents dyspepsia. Good chewing gum is excellent for bad digestion."

Scaled in its purity package—fresh, clean and full-flavored.

INTEREST INTENSE IN ILLINOIS VOTE

Largest Primary Turnout in History Expected; Small Is in Limelight.

(BY ASSOCIATED PRESS)

Chicago.—The Illinois primary election, tomorrow, is expected to bring out the largest primary vote the state ever has known. Sharply drawn issues, both state and national, have aroused unusual interest. Chief interest centers upon the contest between Governor Len Small, running for re-election on the republican ticket, and Thurlow G. Saxton, state senator. The fight for delegates to the republican national convention between Senator William W. Johnson and President Coolidge, is attracting hardly less attention, while closely following it is the race for the republican senatorial nomination. Ned McCormick, incumbent, has made a strenuous campaign. Charles S. Denton, former governor, is expected to be backed by Senator La Follette, Johnson, Brookhart, and others of the congressional insurgent bloc. Adolph McPherson, and Gilbert Giles Ogden are his opponents. The national fight on the democratic ticket is between William Gibbs McAdoo, seeking an instructed delegation, and the regular party organization which wants unpledged delegates.

AUTOMOBILE FAILS TO PUT CRIMP ON SHOE REPAIR WORK

The universal habit of motorists to put their feet in the rubber's business a bit. If anything it has increased the repairing of shoes. Constant use of the pedals of the car, either the foot brake or the clutch, has more than made up for the wear and tear on shoe leather from walking. So report several Janesville cobbler. Inspection of the shoes shows a round hole worn out generally near the center of the sole leather on either the right or left shoe. One of Janesville's newest industries is the Inventing House Lining company owned and operated and managed by M. A. The product is simply a lining for houses, composed of corrugated paper box material and made in pieces to fit in between the inner and outer walls and in the ceiling, providing insulation and tending toward a warmer house in winter and a cooler one in summer.

Mr. Jorsch is the originator of the simple plan of house insulation which has been installed in 17 homes by this city and in other homes throughout the state.

These heat pockets hold the heat indefinitely as they are insulated with dead air cells which are the poorest conductors of heat and cold known to science. This stops the circulation of air in each exposed inclosure.

The corrugated paper is made by a Sheboygan concern for Mr. Jorsch and distributed by him.

FINANCIAL HEARING ON PAVING, APRIL 14

Adjourned Meeting Next Monday Last Session of Present Council.

Final hearing on the schedule of special assessments levied in connection with the 1924 paving program of nine miles of reinforced concrete will be held by the city council at an adjourned meeting to be held next Monday, April 14. In the council chamber. The adjourned session will be the last meeting of the present city council as the new council is scheduled to go into office Tuesday, April 15.

Only one change will be effective at that time. Councilman J. J. Gokey, resigning in favor of Councilman-elect Bernard H. Palmer. It has not been determined whether the organization of the new council will be held April 15 or the following Monday, April 21, which is a regular meeting night.

The annual run of business is on the docket for tonight's regular meeting of the council at 7:30 o'clock. Were it not for the matter of paving assessments the old council would have adjourned last night, but as it is desired to have the present council conduct the final hearing on these, a week's adjournment will be necessary in order that property owners will be given the 10-day notice required by law.

The hearing next Monday furnishes a final opportunity to property owners affected by the 1924 paving program to state any objections to their assessments and to see that they have been given credit for previous special assessments and for the cost of water. The hearing is for considering the final report of the committee of public works and not for hearing protests in regard to killing off any parts of the year's program.

The Heavens in April

By H. C. S. BRAININ
Of the Columbus Observatory, St. Louis, Mo.

We shall be presented this month with exceptionally fine chances to observe the two planets of the solar system whose orbits lie within the ecliptic, Mercury and Venus. On the sixteenth the former will be at its greatest angular distance from the sun. About this date look for the planet Venus to appear in the east just after the sun sets and over the place where the great orb sank. The altitude of Mercury at this time will be about fifteen degrees; that is, it will appear about halfway up the sky from the horizon to the zenith, the point overhead. Next month we shall return to a discussion of Mercury and Venus, but this time we shall look at the sun's disk, a phenomenon called a transit of Mercury.

Next to Mercury, Venus is the planet nearest the sun; the earth is third. Seen from the earth, it is only 26,000,000 miles from the earth. Except at a transit of the sun's disk, a rare phenomenon, it is invisible anywhere because of the sun's glare. As the planets shine by reflected sunlight alone, their brightness depends upon two factors—their distance from the earth and the sun and their ability to reflect light. The brightest of the so-called "inner" planets, Venus is then entirely invisible because of its proximity to the sun in the sky. Furthermore, the planet has been receding from us till its distance is about 160,000,000 miles, and the apparent size of the planet's disk has decreased in proportion.

This decrease in size tends to overcompensate for the increase in brightness which would naturally follow as it moves toward us, but it is not enough. Venus is still a crescent. This is the only phase of the planet which is visible in the sky, or, at least, the only phase which is visible in the sky. Venus is then entirely invisible because of its proximity to the sun in the sky. Furthermore, the planet has been receding from us till its distance is about 160,000,000 miles, and the apparent size of the planet's disk has decreased in proportion.

main contentions before the court in its arguments to dismiss the suit follow:

That the complaint fails to state a cause of action.

That the complaint does not recite and set forth the true facts as they appear in official records.

That there has been acquiescence in the present boundary by the state of Michigan for such a length of time that the court will not disturb such boundary.

Mr. Rieser made an extended historical statement of the case and presented surveys made by geographers and surveyors, by the various states, and details of the constitutions and territorial acts of the two states.

Michigan's "rights" Michigan's bill of complaint is grounded upon the proposition that the original survey of the boundary line did not accord with the description of the boundary line as the description was set forth by congress when the state of Michigan was admitted to the union. Attorney Rieser declared, "and that though such survey line does accord in most respects with the description of the boundary line of the state of Wisconsin as contained in the enabling act of said state, and adopted by the act of congress, such enabling act being subsequent to the Michigan act, must give way to the rights of Michigan."

Accepted and Rights Waived
"The motion of the state of Wisconsin rests primarily upon the well established principle that long continued acquiescence by the complaining state in a boundary line not conforming exactly to the description of such boundary line as contained in the grant to such state, and long continued service of jurisdiction over the territory in question by the defendant state, coupled with the general recognition and acceptance of such boundary line, operates to validate it and vesting in the defendant state from the beginning a valid title by prescription. The continued claim on the part of Wisconsin, recognized, amounts to a practical construction of the original act of Michigan's description of ambiguity and uncertainty is correct, and if that theory is rejected, it is our theory that there has been a universal and general recognition of Wisconsin's claim over so long a period that society has adjusted itself and rights have accrued from the hypothesis of Wisconsin's sovereignty over the disputed territory that Michigan must be held to have waived any right that she may ever have had in such territory. This, we think, substantially states the issue presented by this motion."

True Story of

he felt he knew their maneuvers and could guide the president in handling them. When Mr. Wilson reached Paris he found Colonel House in close contact with the entire situation. The allied statesmen continued to deal with the colonel in the hope that he might influence President Wilson. Instead of occupying the position of a subordinate to the president he really became an intermediary between the president, on the one hand, and the allied statesmen on the other. The headquarters of the American peace commission were at the Hotel Crillon, where Colonel House held forth. The other members of the peace mission saw him occasionally but for the most part there were no meetings of the entire delegation at which any action was taken, except to ratify conclusions already reached.

Confidence either by the president or Colonel House. Relatives of Colonel House were attached to his staff. The unique position of the colonel developed the usual antipathy so common among the Americans in and about the American peace mission. There were two groups—those who were anti-House and those who were for him. Those who opposed did not hesitate to spread the word, which eventually reached the president that Colonel House had set up a sort of counter-establishment at the Hotel Crillon. One day the president happened in at the Crillon to see Colonel House, who talked with him a few minutes and excused himself in order to receive Premier Clemenceau. Incidents of this kind was not lost upon those who sought to give the impression that the colonel was trying to lead it over.

Newspaper articles began to appear, telling that the real power in the American peace delegation was Colonel House. Some of these stories caught the eye of Mrs. Wilson, who did not fail to take a deep interest in everything that affected her husband and particularly those things in which she deemed that Mr. Wilson's interests were being subordinated. One day the colonel went to the house where the president and Mrs. Wilson lived during the peace conference. As was his custom the colonel stopped to chat for a few moments with Mrs. Wilson. The colonel was in high spirits, feeling that the peace conference was proceeding to a successful conclusion. He was particularly jubilant that day because of the apparent conversion of an influential section of the British press to the support of Mr. Wilson. The colonel told Mrs. Wilson that one of the most prominent London editors had become so impressed with the American viewpoint that he could count on effective editorial aid from that quarter. The colonel remarked that his sole object was to help make the whole negotiation a success so that it would redound to the credit of his chief, Woodrow Wilson.

At this point Mrs. Wilson drew forth a clipping from the London newspaper in question and pointed to an article of laudatory character which gave Colonel House the credit for the many things accomplished in the American peace mission, and which pointed out that if Mr. Wilson would let the colonel alone there would be an earlier agreement and a much better feeling all around.

Mrs. Wilson asked Colonel House for an explanation of that article which had appeared in a newspaper edited by his friend. Her inquiry inferred he had inspired the article, the inference being that he had exploited himself instead of the president. The colonel is not given to outbursts of indignation but took the accusation quietly. Just then the president asked for the colonel and their conference began.

After that episode the colonel did not return to the Wilson home but conducted all his conferences with the president at the Hotel Crillon. Gossip had it that he never explained the newspaper article to Mrs. Wilson. Nor was there anything to explain. He was not responsible for the speculative comments of the newspapers. The colonel was run to the quick by the coolness which Mrs. Wilson had shown and which the president himself developed immediately afterward. Inside the American peace mission it became known that there had been a separation. The relations between the president and Colonel House were formal thereafter. They were simply those conferences which official business required. Undoubtedly the president absorbed Mrs. Wilson's viewpoint which, together with the attacks that had been made on Colonel House for his alleged compromises, served to end the warmth of the relationship between those two statesmen.

There is another phase of the episode which played an important part. Colonel House was naturally of a conciliatory disposition. He was always trying to keep the allied statesmen in good humor and while he had no power to commit the American peace mission to concessions he was trying constantly to bring about an early peace and a series of agreements which would make all the powers feel more kindly toward the enemy both as well as the League of Nations. His policy may have been a mistaken one, his concessions may have been too numerous but certain it is they did not commit Mr. Wilson to any acceptance of the suggestions the colonel was making.

Mr. Wilson was warned shortly after he arrived in Paris that Colonel House had made arrangements with the various allied statesmen which would make it difficult for the president to make peace. The criticism came in the form of a letter from a prominent New York editor who had been in Paris, an editor whom Mr. Wilson held in high esteem. Thus the campaign against Colonel House began almost immediately after the armistice. It succeeded in the early spring of the following year. The man who for so many years had worked tirelessly and without compensation of any sort for the United States government, was cast aside by Mr. Wilson. The defenders of President Wilson in this controversy will say no doubt that the activities of Colonel House were deserving of the rebuke that they received. It was natural that the colonel who had been given so much power should be the victim of his own efforts to please Woodrow Wilson and at the same time make a practical peace. The documents in the records may prove that had President Wilson followed Colonel House's advice he would have secured more prestige for the Versailles treaty but this will always be a moot point because it involves the hypothetical and there were so many circumstances interrelated in Paris that no clear judgment as to the merits of this particular phase of the controversy will ever be formed. For Mr. Wilson carried to his grave the secret of his separation from Colonel House. Moxas were exchanged of a courteous nature after the president became an invalid but the old association was never reestablished. Indeed at the funeral of Woodrow Wilson, Colonel House was not even invited to sit in mourning in the home on "S Street" where his chief-lain lay dead.

Tomorrow's chapter tells why Wilson broke with Lansing and how the government functioned without an active president.)
